

October 2009

A SELDOM
USED ROOM IS NOW A SPECIAL
RETREAT.

home office redesign incorporated the client's Oriental rug as a focal point.

A room that's hardly used is both a waste of space and a shame. It doesn't take much to transform it into a special place; you just have to have the desire to see its potential realized, and then hire Beryn Hammil to make it a reality.

This client knew that she needed a home office, but a room that's a repository for orphaned furniture isn't a home office, it's just a room with some furniture in it. And is never used!

Beryn consulted with her client to define the functional needs and then went to work.

Using a beautiful rug that the client had in storage as the visual focal point, Beryn added a large bookcase with a comfortable chair and reading lamp to create a reading corner. A new glass desk with good task lighting also made this an efficient work space. Now the client has a multi-functional room to use every day.

And here's what the client says: "My office used to be a place where I'd just come in, leave something there, and quickly shut the door. I never used the room. Beryn changed all that. Now I love to spend time here. It's become an oasis in my busy day."

Call Beryn today to find out how to create a special retreat out of an unused room.